

The 2026 Great Canadian Bioblitz results:

TOTAL OBSERVATIONS 128,906

TOTAL SPECIES  8,253

OBSERVERS  2,405

The third year of the Canadian Wildlife Federation's annual Great Canadian Bioblitz was an even greater success than last year! With over 128,900 observations made by over 2,000 community observers between the Great Canadian Bioblitz and the Campus Nature Challenge, we observed 879 more species than last year!

Check out the project on iNaturalist.ca to see all the stats and amazing observations!

Join us again next September during the next Great Canadian Bioblitz!

INTERESTING OBSERVATIONS

Northern Narwhal!

© Jeffrey H. Skevington

A very cool observation of a Narwhal skeleton in Pond Inlet, Nunavut. There are currently only 71 observations of Narwhal in Canada; three of those were taken during this year's Great Canadian Bioblitz!

Professional percussionist

© Amir Said

This beautiful Prairie Rattlesnake is an incredibly exciting, and equally beautiful, reptile to see! This misunderstood creature is one of only three rattlesnake species in Canada.

A tree with teeth!

© Ashlea Viola

This observation of a Northern Tooth fungus is quite a sight! Check out the observation link to get a closer look at the incredible texture of this shelf fungus.

Cool Carnivore

© kenziewarman

Purple Pitcher Plants are a common carnivorous bog-dwelling plant. Yet, despite being common, they are always a treat to encounter thanks to their incredibly cool ecology!

Endangered super(small)star!

© Brian Starzomski

A wonderful treat to see a jumping slug this fall! This group of small, at-risk species are difficult to find; a remarkable observation to add to the very few observations of jumping slugs in Canada.

Sunny Hidalgo Mason Wasp

© Allison Zhang

The most observed species this year was the Common Eastern Bumblebee, but this Hidalgo Mason Wasp deserves a little spotlight too! This at-risk insect can only be found in parts of Ontario or B.C..